Home could be a Hotel

By Noel O'Driscoll

NO pets, no children, no parties– if you can abide by these rules you could be the next resident of the Carlton Abbey Hotel in Athy.

Home could be a hotel

The Camelot property management company is looking for five people to live in the hotel as live-in guardians. The hotel closed suddenly on 2 January.

Those selected to become live-in guardians will pay €100 per calendar month under a temporary lease agreement to live in the hotel and provide a round the clock presence on the property.

Jeff McCann of Camelot Ireland said the guardians provide a human presence on the property. “This will insure that the building is in constant occupation and it is the most natural deterrent to burglars. We are looking for five live-in guardians in Athy and the guardians will live in the property under a temporary lease agreement as opposed to a rent. As part of the agreement they agree that there will be no parties, no pets and no children. We also insist that guardians notify us in advance of any guests that they might be having at the property.”

The Kildare Nationalist understands that a strict vetting process exists for those wishing to become live-in guardians and those who are interested can apply online on the Camelot Ireland website.
